

ABSTRACT

A network system is comprised of a learning management program in a CPU to send and receive a learning frame, a frame transfer unit which transfers a learning frame, and a learning frame transmission management unit which judges whether learning has completed or not.